Alumni Spotlight: Joey Broda

I am excited to share our first alumni spotlight of the year, Joey Broda! Joey was the Speaker during my first session as a backbencher in YPM 96 and I still can vividly recall his final speech in the chamber and the inspiration it has served since throughout my own journey in YPM.

The Member from Joliette, Joey joined Youth Parliament for the first time in the 89th session. He then went on to join Cabinet, as Whip in the 90th session, Minister of Government Services in the 91st, and Minister of Finance in the 92nd. Successfully running for the executive in the 92nd election, he was the 93rd session's House Leader, followed by Deputy Premier in the 94th, Premier in the 95th, and finally Speaker in the 96th. For his many contributions to the organization, he was elected a Senator in the 97th session.

Presently, Joey works as a chemical engineer for a natural gas utility in British Columbia. He works with municipalities and farmers to design biogas plants that break down organic waste (think landfills and poop) into renewable energy. His work also involves repurposing the gas grid to transport renewable energy and implementing new technologies like bioenergy with carbon capture and storage. . His objective is to expand the range of options available for reducing greenhouse gas emissions to effectively combat climate change.

Knowing that public policy is just as important as technological innovation in developing sustainable energy sources, he is involved with the NDP as an electoral district president. Reflecting on his time in Youth Parliament, Joey recognizes the unique blend of community and work that Youth Parliament fostered. The exposure to diverse backgrounds and beliefs provided him with a greater skill to communicate across social, political, and ideological divides. Moreover, the sincerity encouraged within Youth Parliament discussions allowed for compassionate political discourse, which has continued to shape Joey's approach to activism. After YPM, he wanted to find a community where people were politically engaged and trying to take meaningful action. He has found a similar home in mutual aid organizing, where he's focused on food aid and decreasing barriers to political participation.

His extensive involvement in Youth Parliament, followed by his engineering expertise and political engagement, is an achievement that serves as a model for an interdisciplinary approach to tackling societal challenges effectively. Joey Broda stands as a remarkable example of bridging the gap between policy and the environment, and we are privileged to have him as an alumnus.
